CID UPDATE

Martin Romero, acting director for the Construction Industries Division (CID) has announced that the topic has been delayed another 30 days, making the deadline October 31.

The current proposal states that well-owners would have to get a licensed electrical contractor to perform work. The contractor would have to sign a statement saying the work is in compliance with applicable electrical codes and that the contractor is liable for the work. The work would then need to be inspected by a nationally certified inspector under the same standards used now by the CID.

There would be a link on the CID website to the national registry of certified inspectors to allow customers and utilities to confirm inspectors are qualified. This entire process would be mandated by either NM Public Regulation Commission rule or utility tariff.

CID is supposed to provide written response to the question of which facilities are no longer going to be inspected by CID. There are other specifics within the directive that have not been resolved.

CVE continues to be actively involved in the process and will continue to insist on safety for our employees, members and the community.

A Full House of Energy Savings

HAVE YOU SCHEDULED YOUR FREE HOME ENERGY AUDIT YET?

A Home Energy Audit is an inspection and evaluation of your home's energy efficiency level.

What to expect during a Home Energy Audit

A licensed and insured professional home energy auditor will ...

- Perform an infiltration test to determine where air is leaking
- Perform a duct efficiency test to determine if the home's heating, ventilation and air conditioning system is working properly

What you will receive

- A detailed audit report letting you know what you can do to help correct any problems, and get the professional help you might need to make any repairs
- A FREE Energy Saving Kit to help you make small repairs at your own pace
